EARL OF SANDWICH.

His Ancient Peerage, to Which a New-York Girl's Fiancé Is Heir.

Lord Sandwich, whose nephew and heir presumptive, George Montagu, Member of Parliament for Southampton, is to be married on July 25 in London to Miss Alberta Sturges, stepdaughter of Francis M. Leggett, of New-York, is the eighth holder of his carldom, which was bestowed in 1800 on a nephew of the first Earl of Manchester. He was a very distinguished naval and military commander, was one of the most conspicuous fig-ures at the coronation of King James II, and feli in the great naval battle with the Dutch off South-

The present Lord Sandwich is, therefore, the chief of the junior branch of that House of Mon-tagu of which the Duke of Manchester is the chief, and makes his home at Minchingbrooke, near Hantington, in a grand old genuine Elizabethan mansion, built by Sir Oliver Cromwell, uncle of the Protector, on the site of a Benedictine convent, which had been granted by King Henry VIII to Thomas Cromwell, his gentleman of the chamber. Sir Oliver Cromwell entertained both Queen Elizabeth and King James I with such an amount of splendor and at such lavish cost that he was obliged to sell the place, which was thereupon purchased by Sir Sydney Montagu, father of the purish Lord Sandwich. Part of the old Benedictine convent remains incorporated in the house built by Sir Oliver Cromwell, and there are some grand old stained glass windows adorned with the Cromwell arms, a number of old family portraits and a magnificent library, in which, of course, the diaries of Samuel Pepys, a near kinsman and intimate friend of the first earl, have a conspicuous place.

Lord Sendwich is an elderly bachelor, in somewhat feeble health. He formerly served in the army, and his next heir is his brother, the Hou. Victor Montagu, an admiral of the navy and a Crimean veteran, whose wife, Lady Agneta, a sister of the late Earl of Hardwick, is a lady in aiting to the King's sister, Princess Christian, Miss Sturges has therefore made quite a desirable match, since she is destined not only to become in course of time a peeress of the realm, with an ancient title, several grand old country seats and estates extending over some twenty thousand acres, but will likewise, through the influence of her mother-in-law, Lady Agneta Montagu, obtain the entrée to the court circle.

A GERMAN PRINCE WHO KNOWS PARIS. Prince Donnersmarck, whose name has come so preminently before the public, not only in connection with his contribution of 2,000,000 marks toward the Kaiser's fund for assisting army officers in straitened circumstances, but also as the exponent of the Emperor's views at Paris on the Moroccan question, the Franco-German agreement and the France-German crisis in general, probably knows France and French statesmen better than any other member of the German aristocracy or official world. Colossally rich, he was formerly, as Count Guido of Henckel Donnersmarck, one of the most favored habitues of the Tuileries in the last few years of the reign of Napoleon III, and often led the cotilions at Empress Eugénie's celebrated Mon-days. While apparently devoting himself entirely frivolity and a life of pleasure, he kept both his ears and his eyes open, and became a frequenter of the salons of that extraordinary woman, the Marquise de Paiva, in that superb mansion of hers e Champs Elysées, which is now the home of the Paris Travellers' Club, to which so many Amer-The Marquise de Paiva was (like her sister, who afterward married the Marquis de Noailles, former ly French Envoy at Washington) the daughter of a little Jewish tailor of the name of Lachmann, at and composer Herz, was expelled in the most ignoinious fashion from the Palace of St. Cloud by

Moscow, came to Paris in the train of the musician order of Empress Eugénie on one occasion, when through some mistake she had obtained an invitation, amassed an immense fortune as one of the queens of the Parisian half-world, and then in-duced a Portuguese nobleman of the name of Palva to marry her, the man shortly afterward blowing out his brains when he realized the shame he had brought on his house by such a match. This did not, however, prevent her salon from being freuented by all the most eminent statesmen, mos rilliant clubmen, foreign ambassadors, French government officials and palace dignituries then in Paris. Even M. Thiers, afterward President of the Republic, and the personification of bourgeois pro-priety, did not disdain to pay her court, and it was at her house that one heard everything that was going on in Paris, Edmond About, the celebrated novelist and editor, being among her most

MARQUISE DE PAIVA AS BISMARCK'S AGENT It was only after the war that the French government became aware that for several years prior to the conflict, and during its earlier stages, she had acted as a secret agent of Prince Bismarck, forwarding to him all the immensely valuable information which she had obtained from her friends and admirers at Paris without their dreaming at the time of the danger to which they exposed their country by discussing its affairs, and even its secrets so ingenuously and openly in her presence.

Her beauty was superior even to her brilliancy and cleverness. Indeed, it was of so fascinating a character that Count Henckel Donnersmarck be-came completely infatuated thereby, and married her at Paris immediately after the restoration of peace, the old Emperor yielding a reluctant consent to the union in deference to the arguments of Prince Bismarck, who impressed his sovereign with the value of the services rendered by the marquise It was this marriage, coupled with the discovery of her relations with Bismarck, that caused her former French friends to denounce her as a traitoress. Paris became unpleasant to her, and, shaking its dust from her feet, she settled on her new husband's vast estates in Silesia, and there erected a palace which was the exact reproduction of St. Free day at the Museum of Arts and Zoological Park. Cloud, the favorite abode of Empress Eugénie, the same, St. Cloud from which she had been ejected by the servants of Empress Eugénie as above described. She likewise revenged herself upon the Empress by buying a number of the latter's jewels her own adornment, as well as the furniture of Eugénie's private boudoir at the Tuilcries, the furniture in question being distributed in the hog pens of the principal farms at Neudeck.

Suddenly the countess was overtaken by some malady which robbed her of her loveliness of face and form, and, like that other celebrated beauty of the Napoleonic era, the Countess de Castiglionne, withdrew into the utmost seclusion, allowing ne one, not even her husband, to come near her, and never appearing in the grounds of her Silesian palace save thickly veiled, while servants who had the misfortune to encounter her within the chateau were instantly dismissed. She lingered on until 1884, and three years after her death her husband married another fascinating Russian, but this time of excellent birth, namely, the twenty-three-year-old divorced wife of Count Mouravieff, by whom he has a son, to whom old Prince Bismarck stood god-

Count Henckel Donnersmarck maintained to the end his friendship with the old Chancellor, furnished most of the money for the running of the newspaper known as the "Hamburg News," in which Bismarck, after his retirement, was wont to give utterance to his opinions, and only ofter the old Chancellor's death became intimate with the present Emperor, their friendship being based on William's admiration for the loyalty of the count to the old Chancellor, while the count on his side was compelled, especially in view of developments Bismarck's death, to admire the forbearance and patience with which the ex-Chancellor had been treated by his sovereign Tais mutual regard found its expression in the Kaiser's grant of the title of Prince of Donnersmarck to the count about

"TEN RUSSIAN SIRENS AT WASHINGTON." Mention of the Marquise de Paiva and of her role as one of Bismarck's agents in the days of the French Empire serves to recall to mind the fact that in the preposterously sensational book, Joubert's "Fall of Tsardom," recently published, the statement is made that in Washington the Russian government maintains no less than ten of these ly, their drawing rooms, with shaded rose colored lights and luxurious furniture and hangings, being balaces of case for weary legislators and Senators, These fascinating sirens then dictate in whispers what laws shall or shall not be passed by Con-

It would be interesting to learn the identity of these sirens and of the Senators and legislators who bask in the sunlight of their fascinations, and while Russia certainly has a large number of these petticoated agents in her employ, particularly in Local forecast: Partly cloudy and cooler to-day and Paris, London, Berlin, Vienna and Rome, and even Saturday; light to fresh north winds.

at such places as Cairo, Lisbon and the capitals of FAREWELL TO STEVENS. t would be possible to round up ten of them in Washington. What agents the Russian government has in this country of a feminine character do not make their headquarters at Washington, where it would be impossible to maintain that secrecy which is indispensable to the success of their work. They are to be found in New-York, also at Boston, and some will put in a quiet appearance at the fashionable watering places. They work independently of the Czar's embassies and of the consulates, with which they have no connection, and one of the reasons why the Russian official representatives abroad are so reluctant to express themselves concerning any one about whom they are asked is because they never know whether the individual in question, male or female, is not some secret agent, possibly reporting over their own heads to their own chief about their own shortcomings.

Nor is Russia the only government that employs women as secret agents. The first wife of Prince Donnersmarck, the Countess de Castiglione, the Milanese Duchess of Litta, Princess Lise Troubetskoy, Mme. Olga de Novikoff and Mme. de Lex are among those whose political activity by degrees became revealed to the detriment of their usefulness. But there are many others equally gifted, equally well born and more discreet, who are content to work unobtrusively in the dark, less for any question of remuneration than for the satisfaction of knowing that they are playing a role in the important game of international politics and helping to pull the wires that move the pieces on that chessboard known as the "concert of great powers." J. M. Singleton, president of the Chinese Empire Reform Association, yesterday called at the Corporation Counsel's office and was informed that the Chinamen who were drilling at No. 9 Mott-st, would not be interfered with so long as they drilled within doors and were not drilling for a foreign country. Major McVicker, superintendent of the boys' clubs of St. Bartholomew's Parish House, said last evening to a Tribune reporter that he would continue drilling the Chinamen as here-tofore. On the arrival from Washington of Kang Yu Wei, the grand head of the Chinese Empire Yu Wei, the grand head of the Chinese Empire Association, the regement would meet him in Jersey City, as planned, and escort him to his hotel in Manhattan, he said.

Maior McVicker said there were about eight thousand Chinamen drilling in different cities of the United States. They had been drilling for six months in Philadelphia with rifles used in the regular army, and had been drilling for a year in San Francisco. They had no intention of returning to China to engage in any rebellion against their mother country, but drilled to build up body and mind and to gain a military carriage.

Cornell Graduates Married After Receiving

Their Diplomas.

Ithaca, N. Y., June 22.-After receiving their dilomas at Cornell University to-day, Miss Olive R. Edwards, of Ithaca, a graduate in the arts course, and Edwin W. Kramer, of Patterson, La., graduate n civil engineering, celebrated the close of their ollege days by being united in marriage to-night, The young people became acquainted in the classroom in their sophomore year, and became engaged in their junior year, but deferred marriage until each had finished the college course.

The bride is a niece of Professor A. D. Macgillvary, of Cornell, at whose home the wedding was held. The bridesmaid, Miss Nellie Palmer, of

Mr. Hammerstein Finds a Coney Island Girl with a Voice.

As a result of a visit to Coney Island, Oscar Hammerstein has discovered a new vocal star. The "discovery," Miss Flossie Crane, has never received a singing lesson in her life, and her vocal performances have thus far been confined to Coney Island. Mr. Hammerstein will bill her at Ham-merstein's Roof Garden next week as "The Girl from Coney Island." Mr. Hammerstein says he naid a visit to the island last Friday, and was passing a café in Surf-ave, when he heard issuing a voice which caused him to stop and listen, amazed. The voice was singing a low class comit song, but there was quality in the voice. He says he found the girl at a table drinking. He engaged

A syndicate has been formed to produce Silas G. Pratt's music drama "America," in picture, music and song at Brighton Beach this season, A special theatre is being built on the Pike, near Boer War spectacle, and performances will be given afternoon and evening. The incident of "Paul Revere's Ride" will be further illustrated by twenty-five historical views. This is followed by "The Revolution." The drama ends with the allegory of the Civil War which was produced at Madison Square Garden under the auspices of the Grant Monument Association.

Owing to the storm, the first performance of "The Fall of Port Arthur" at Manhattan Beach was postponed until to-night.

President Tells Graduates of Institute's Progress.

The thirty-third annual commencement exercises of Stevens Institute of Technology were held yesterday morning at 19:30 o'clock in the auditorium of main building. Forty-eight students were graduated with the degree of Mechanical Engineer. The honorary degree of Doctor of Engineering was conferred on Colonel Edwin Augustus Stevens, Palmer Chamberlaine Ricketts, president of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, and Captain David Watson Taylor, naval constructor, U. S. N. Colonel Edwin A. Stevens is a son of the first Edwin A. Stevens, founder of the institute, and Edwin A. Stevens, jr., a son of the colonel, was among those

Bishop Lines, of Newark, made the invocation and gave the benediction, Dr. Ricketts made the address to the students. He warned them carefully against gaining the impression that they knew all there was to be learned in reference to mechanical and elec. trical engineering, and laid out a course for them to pursue which he admitted would entail strict application to business and constant study, but would ultimately lead to success. Dr. Alexander C. Humphreys, president of the institute, in an introdustory address said:

I am glad to be able to announce that the Morton Memorial Volume has at last been published. This volume was originally intended to commemorate our twenty-fifth anniversary, which occurred in 1897. Mr. Morton so enlarged the scope of the book that its publication was necessarily delayed, and when he died, in 1802, the alumni decided to still further enlarge its scope, to make it a memorial of Dr. Morton, and as such to have it include the history of Stevens Institute during the thirty-one years of his presidency.

such to have it include the allow of this presidency.

Last year I regretfully announced that for lack of means we were still unable to proceed with the building of the Morton Memorial Laboratory of Chemistry. I am now glad to be able to announce that work on that memorial to our revered late president is well under way and we shall do our utmost to have it ready for work next fall.

Last year I stated that certain additions to our plant were required and also an addition to our endowners, to meet present needs and to provide support for these plant additions. I stated the total amount required as about $750,000, and that we had in hand and in sight about $159,000, this including the alumni building fund, to be applied to the Morton Memorial, and $50,000 which I thought could be secured for a students hall.

Since then this $50,000 and an additional $50,000 from Andrew Carnegie (which would bring up his total benefactions to $340,000 have been definitely promised, provided another $100,000 can be secured. Some progress has already been made in securing subscriptions for a new and larger shop. I hope that during the coming school year we shall complete the fund for the Morton Laboratory, secure the balance required for the shop and enough more to complete $100,000 contingently subscribed.

State Commissioner Addresses City College Graduates.

The fifty-third annual commencement of the College of the City of New-York was held last evening at Carnegie Hall, when eighty-three graduates raceived degrees, fifty-four getting the degree of Bachelor of Arts and twenty-nine that of Bachelor of Science. On the platform, besides President Finley, were State Commissioner Andrew S. Draper, President Henry N. Tiftt of the Board of Education, Edward M. Shepard, Professor Alfred George Compton, Professor Adolph Werner, Edward Lauterbach and others.

The degree of Bachelor of Arts was conferred by Professor Werner, while that of Bachelor of Science was conferred by Professor Compton.

Following the opening prayer there were four student orations, by William Armand Hannig, Alexander B. Slegel, who achieved over 50 per cent, and Louis Weinberg and Kenneth Groesbeck, who were in the 55 to 59 per cent division.

After a musical selection came the address by Dr. Draper. He began by complimenting President Finley on the achievements of the college and of its work, and then spoke briefly and humorously of his own commencement. nates received degrees, fifty-four getting the degree

PRAISE FOR PRESIDENT.

Dr. Schurman Also Lauds Mr. Cleveland.

Ithaca, N. Y., June 22.—The thirty-seventh annual commencement of Cornell University wn held in the armory to-day before the largest throng of visitors in the history of the institution. A down-pour of rain prevented the usual parade of faculty and seniors about the campus, but the exercises were held on schedule time in the large armory. First degrees were conferred on 611 students in the different courses, and sixty-seven advance degrees were conferred upon others. The exercises were presided over by President Jacob Gould Schurman, who delivered his annual address. He said in part:

I have recently been much impressed with two splendid illustrations of the influence of moral splendid illustrations of the influence of moral character. Have you thought of the unparalleled thing which President Roosevelt recently undertook and successfully accompilshed? I mean, of course, the bringing of Russia and Japan together with a view to the ending of the carnage in far-off Manchurla. No man without superb courage would have essayed such a wellnigh hopeless task; no man without the inspiration of an honest purpose could have plucked the flower, safety, from that nettle, danger. The most beloved and admired of Americans, his strength lay in the world's confidence in his integrity, his fairness and his devotion to righteous ends. Character has summoned the moral power of the nations to his aid; without character his action would have been that of a meddler and mischief uaker.

Or let me take another example. Here is a vast character his action would have been that of a meddler and mischlef unaker.

Or let me take another example. Here is a vast corporation, holding in trust for widows and orphans unimaginable millions of dollars. But the bost asset the Equitable Life Assurance Society ever had was the spotless reputation of Henry B. Hyde, the man who created the business. So long as he lived the company was associated as Gibraltar. Within the last six months we have seen it become an object of universal distrust, its business paralyzed, its officers severely condemned by its own directors, its organization rapidly disintegrating and the spectre of a receivership or of bankruptcy confronting it in a future apparently not very remote. Now, what saved the Equitable society? I say it has been saved by the grace and potency of character which built it up. Stronger than all the forces of criticism, of disintegration, of personal rivalries seven of faulty and therefore dangerous organization, is the name of that sturdy, honest, tried and tested and absolutely reliable American Grover Cleveland. Our Republic is exalted by highminded men like Theodore Roosevelt and Grover Cleveland. It is fitting that the Republic has exalted them also.

Of intercollegiate athletics President Schurman

Of intercollegiate athletics President Schurman

The critic wants to know whether our colleges and universities have not dethroned Apollo and the Muses and set up the image of Hercules, with his club. He reads in the newspapers of diamonds, and gridirons, and tracks, and courses, until he wonders with the studious cloister. Indeed, the charge is made by men who should know better that the pursuit of knowledge at our colleges and universities has been paralyzed by devotion to athletic sports.

Well, I shall speak only of Cornell, because I know the facts at Cornell. It is true, I admit, that on that last Saturday of May when the navy of Japan was sinking the battleships and cruisers of Russia in the Straits of Tsu-Shima, Cornell students were winning over their rivals in the great universities of the East four splendid victories, both on land and on water. Now, abstractly considered, there is nothing reprehensible in these victories. Although intercollegiate Cornellians go away to play a game a few times a year, it should be remembered that between three thousand and four thousand are at the university, doing faithfully their daily work.

From The Rochester Herald.

A Chinaman recently made his appearance at a drug store in Charlestown, Mass., and presented a prescription for some bug killing powder. When he was given the powder the clerk was particularly careful to tell him that it was the deadliest of poisons, and that he must be careful in using it or leaving it around. The clerk was somewhat surprised a few hours later to see his customer returning, supported by another Chinaman, and evidently very sick. Guessing that his directions had not been followed out, he prepared an antidote, and by hard work revived the sufferer.

The explanation of the disobedience was given with the stoical, convincing manner of the East.

For the benefit of the Naval Relief Society, in which several well known women are interested, an entertainment was given in the sail loft at the Brooklyn Navy Yard last night. Mrs. Roswell D. Hitchcock, widow of a commander in the navy, talked of her travels, illustrating by humorous crayon sketches by Frince Paleologue, of Rumania the tramp could be found. Mr. McPherson sold the diamond for 500, and speat every cent of the money or a function of the could be found. Mr. McPherson sold the diamond for 500, and speat every cent of the money or a function of the coulding and provided with the money.

In the sake of the retarrities and for the sake of the cruck, and the speak of the cruck and the function of the coulding and solored the setting into the cruck and solored the setting into the split part of the cruck, where it remained, the ring being broken away. As no clew to the identity of the cruck and the function of the cruck and the function of the coulding and the coulding and the coulding and the cruck and the function of the cruck. They cleared it out with an awi, and in doing so discovered a large diagnond and part of a gold setting around it. The cripple in washing must have set the cruck upon a yesterday afternoon. At Leonard-st, he stepped among some packing boxes, and as he did so accidentally bumped into a man. The man, after apologizing, was about to go on when the Congressman felt for his watch and chain and found it was gone. He grabbed the man and shouted for help. William Knoblock, of No. 39 West 24th-st, also seized the man and between them he was held until Patrolman Gorman placed him under arrest. The man said he was Dennis Driscoll, of No. 324 East 24th-st. He denied the theft. According to the testimony given by Mr. Knoblock, the prisoner passed the watch to a confederate, who escaped. The watch was not found on Driscoll.

The watch is valued at $500. It was given to the Congressman by the Masons of the First Masonic District when he was deputy grand master. The fob was valued at $1,000. Some time ago Congressman Goldfogle presided in the House of Representatives for one day, in the absence of the Speaker. That was the first time in ten years that a Democrat had presided over the House, and to commemorate it the Congressmen subscribed for the fob.

Driscoll was held pending investigation. At Leonard-st, he stepped among some pack-CASS GILBERT BUYS ESTATE.

It was announced yesterday that Cass Gilbert, of No. 45 East 78th-st., had contracted to purchase one of the finest tracts of land on the north shore of Long Island. The property is at West Neck, near Huntington, and contains over 210 acres. It is said that the property will be the nucleus of a large estate. It is understood to be Mr. Gilbert's intention to develop the property on a large scale.
